Foseco India Ltd

Concall Tracker · Q2 2027 (quarter ended Sep 2026) · first report

1. Snapshot

Foseco sells consumables that foundries use to make cleaner metal castings: filters, feeding sleeves, coatings and binders. It is part of the UK Vesuvius group. In November 2025 it bought three-quarters of Morganite Crucible India (now Foseco Crucible), which makes crucibles for melting non-ferrous metals.

Net profit, last 12 months (standalone)	Rs 96 cr	Up from Rs 75 cr in calendar 2025.
Debt	Nil	It has no borrowings.
P/E	47	The market pays a rich price for each rupee of profit.

Quarter	Date	Transcript read?
Sep 2026 quarter	6 Nov 2026	No call held; results filing and news read

Foseco India does not hold earnings calls. Its financial year runs January to December, so the Sep 2026 quarter is its third quarter.

Latest update highlights: Sep 2026 quarter (results filed 6 Nov 2026)

- Standalone sales were Rs 199 cr, up about a third on last year, the fastest growth in two years.
- Consolidated sales were Rs 252 cr and net profit Rs 40 cr, against Rs 16.5 cr a year ago; most of that jump is the crucible unit, which was not owned last year.
- The crucible unit earned Rs 14 cr profit on Rs 53 cr sales in the quarter, a much richer business than it was before the takeover.
- The board agreed in August to buy Vesuvius India's Mehsana crucible plant for Rs 43 cr, due to close by Dec 2026 subject to approvals.
- Morgan Advanced Materials, which held about 15% of Foseco, sold out through a block deal taken up by funds such as SBI MF, Mirae, Invesco and LIC.

Business mix & capacity

Domestic vs export: Not broken out in the public material read; it is overwhelmingly an India business serving Indian foundries.

Capacity use: Not disclosed. The Mehsana purchase adds a ready crucible plant rather than a new build.

3. Earning Trigger thesis

The trigger is the crucible buy. It took Foseco from foundry consumables for iron and steel into crucibles for aluminium and copper melting, and the unit is already adding meaningfully to group profit. The parent itself has picked up pace too. What it can't show is guidance: there are no calls and no stated targets, so the story has to be read from the numbers.

Trigger	What management said	Evidence so far	Time horizon	Strength
Foseco Crucible (ex-Morganite)	Bought to widen the range for non-ferrous foundries; renamed and brought under Foseco management	Adds about a fifth of group sales and a bigger share of profit in 2026	Live now	Strong: already in the numbers
Mehsana crucible plant from Vesuvius India	Lump-sum buy of a plant making crucibles, stoppers and sleeves	Agreed Aug 2026, not yet closed	By Dec 2026	Unproven: small, still pending approvals
Core foundry demand	No stated outlook	Standalone sales up about a third in the Sep quarter	Ongoing	Moderate: tracks auto and industrial castings

3b. Trigger check

Trigger type	Yes/No	What was said (date)
Debt cut	No	Debt-free already.
New business	Yes	Acquired 75% of Morganite Crucible India, closed 12 Nov 2025; crucibles for non-ferrous melting.
Margin up	No	Standalone operating margin flat at 17-18%.
New management	No	No change found at MD level.
New capacity	Yes	Board approved buying Vesuvius India's Mehsana plant, 13 Aug 2026.
Big orders	No	No order book disclosed.
Turnaround	No	Already profitable.
Promoter buying	No	Promoter holding steady at 63.5%.

The single concrete driver: The Morganite Crucible takeover adds a profitable crucible business that already lifts group profit well above the parent's own.

4. Management consistency scorecard

Period	What was promised	What actually happened	Verdict
Aug 2025	Buy 75% of Morganite Crucible India and run an open offer	Deal closed Nov 2025; unit renamed Foseco Crucible	Delivered
2026	Bring the unit to minimum public holding rules	Small stake sold to get to 75% promoter holding	Delivered
Aug 2026	Buy Vesuvius India's Mehsana plant	Pending approvals, due by Dec 2026	Too-early

Narrative drift: There is little to drift from: Foseco makes few public promises and holds no calls. What it said it would do on the acquisition it did, on time. The weak spot is transparency, not consistency.

5. Bottom line

Durable earning trigger? → YES

The crucible acquisition is real, closed, and already in the profit line, and the parent is growing faster too. The catch is that much of this year's jump is the deal, so next year the comparison gets harder.

Management consistent? → MAYBE

Every stated deal step has been delivered. But with no calls and no guidance there's no promise track record to test, so this can't be a full yes.

6. Checkpoints for next quarter

- Mehsana plant purchase closes by December
- Crucible unit keeps adding profit at this quarter's pace
- Standalone sales keep growing at double digits
